STORIES FROM INTERFAITH RAINFOREST INITIATIVE

Indonesia, home to the second largest rainforest in the world, has a crucial role to play in slowing down the global climate crisis. By saving the rainforests that are also on the verge of destruction, we are also saving the ecosystems within them and saving the future of the earth, our common home. Cooperation and collaboration between all parties is essential in this endeavor. One of the causes of the destruction of nature is the crisis of morality, where greed is at the root. Therefore, the involvement of indigenous peoples and religious communities in determining the sustainability of rainforests and their ecosystems is crucial as they are considered to be the source of moral foundations.
